

Your worst nightmare
In psychology they say when you're asleep you can't see clocks

If you're reading this I'm about to shock the life out of you
You're awake in a dream world
This isn't real

You wake in horror and cold sweat
You search around and see what I mean
Your partner isn't there in bed next to you I mean
You get up and look for them
Your kids aren't there too

You search for a clock on the wall
You took my message to heart
Well more fool you

You can't see any clocks or things that can tell you the time
Are you awake for real?
Or have I tricked your mind into thinking you're asleep?
As you sit on the ground and about to break down
You hear a tapping like fingers on wood
You wish you could awake from this nightmare

Well be careful for what you wish for

I'm awake to wake you up
You will scream and you will shake in fear
You will remember that I told you I wasn't like other people
I'm different in many ways
And you will never see the truth to me

Before I forget to say

You haven't been asleep
I took everything you loved and I took it away
And one day you might be lucky to get it back

My logic is like no other

This was your worst nightmare and I made it come true
